3. Cathleen Clarke at Margot Samel, New York

Poetically exploring the spirit of youth, Cathleen Clarke makes paintings of ghostly children at play and in moments of dreamlike repose. Rendering fading figures with feathery brushwork, The Chicago-born, Brooklyn-based painter taps into memory, mortality and the passing of time, in her gatherings of costumed trick-or-treaters and conversing young girls floating atop a cloud-like bed during an overnight slumber party. Capturing the tween moment when kids are still children yet anticipating who they will become as adults, Clarke appealingly paints a fuzzy otherworldly realm, where confusion emotionally mixes with hope. Tomorrow might be a lifetime away for her haunting subjects, but they can hardly wait for it to arrive.
